HALFAYA HEAVILY BOMBARDED

AXIS OFFERS STUBBORN RESISTANCE

UNITS of the Royal Navy, co-operating with the British artillery and Air Force, on Thursday bombarded the Axis defences in Halfaya area, states a British communiqué.

Stubborn engagements with the rearguard of General Rommel's forces are reported.

Friday's British communiqué from General Headquarters, Cairo, said:—

"Throughout yesterday our mobile columns continued to press the enemy rearguards covering the withdrawal of his main body towards Agheila.

"Enemy resistance north and south of the main Jedabya-Agheila road was more stubborn than that encountered by our columns further south, although had going in the latter areas seriously interfered with the speed of our advance.

"As on the previous day, our advance south-west of Jedabya was delayed by further mine-fields, which had evidently been well sited and carefully

Air Forces, operating in support of our mobile columns over a wide area, had a particularly successful day, destroying a number of enemy aircraft in aerial combats.

"The enemy lines of communication west of El Agheila were also repeatedly attacked. A number of direct hits were obtained on transport vehicles, and also on coastal shipping, which is being used to bring stores forward from Tripoli to beaches at various points on the coast of the Gulf of Sirte.

"In the Halfaya area units of the Royal Navy, in close co-operation with our artillery and our Air Forces, carried out a continuous and heavy bombardment of enemy defences throughout the day."

The Air communiqué stated:—

"While on patrol yesterday (January 8) in the Jedabya area, Kitty-hawk aircraft of a Royal Australian Air Force squadron encountered an enemy force of over fifty aircraft, comprised of C.R. 42's, Macchi 200's, G.R. 50's and Messerschmitt 109 F's. Despite the fact that our aircraft were outnumbered by more than five to one, they immediately engaged the enemy, shot down seven and seriously damaged several others of them.

"One of our aircraft is missing from this engagement.

"Motor transport and shipping near Buerat el Msun were attacked with good effect. A ship was hit and set on fire. Bombers of the South African Air Force attacked stores dumps in the region of Ras el Aali, causing considerable damage.

"Malta was again raided yesterday (January 8) and the previous night (January 7-8), and some damage was caused. Two Junkers 88's were hit by anti-aircraft fire, but their destruction is not confirmed. The only aircraft missing from yesterday's operations is the fighter already mentioned.

Joe Louis, world heavy-weight champion since 1937, defending his title for the twentieth time, knocked out Buddy Baer in the first round at New York last night. The fight lasted 2 minutes 56 seconds.

HEAVY FIGHTING IN MALAYA

KUALA LUMPUR CUT OFF, SAYS TOKYO

BRITISH and other Imperial troops, fighting heavy battles against Japanese tanks and infantry driving southward through Lower Perak along the main Malayan North-South road, still are barring the Japanese path to Kuala Lumpur.

Throughout yesterday fierce fighting raged in the Slim River area, sixty miles north of the town—chief rubber centre and second city of Malaya—and casualties on both sides were severe.

The Japanese claim that Kuala Lumpur's communications have been cut by troops filtering along one of the peninsula's innumerable rivers.

Unofficial reports from British sources indicate that the city is being prepared for a major action.

In the Philippines operations have dwindled to desultory skirmishes, says the United States War Department.

On the South Kwantung front, Chinese troops have been attacking for 72 hours.—(Reuter.)

BRITISH STILL HOLD TOWN

An admission that Kuala Lumpur—capital of Selangor State and second city of Malaya—is still in British hands, is contained in a Friday night Tokyo despatch to the official German News Agency, but it is claimed that Japanese forces have cut the town's communications. This is a modification of Thursday's Axis reports, which stated that Kuala Lumpur had been occupied. "Violent fighting is now raging in the Kuala Lumpur section," the despatch says. "The British are still apparently trying to hold the town against Japanese forces approaching from the north, but their rear lines of communication have been cut by the Japanese, who have approached along one of the numerous rivers of Malaya. The flank of the British is now open only towards the Malacca Straits. From the north, south and east they are encircled, and are under violent artillery fire."

A despatch from Malaya to the Domei Agency in Tokyo claims that the British forces in Northern Selangor are "in general retreat towards the State of Negri Sembilan," and that "the British are hurriedly destroying bridges and roads in the line of retreat."—(Reuter.)

TIN AND RUBBER LOSSES

Britain's losses in tin and rubber through the hostilities in Malaya have been detailed by Singapore radio.

The general position is that 60 to 70 per cent. of the tin production is no longer available to the British or Japanese. The rest is available to the British only. Fifty per cent. of the rubber production is no longer available to the British, and only available to the Japanese under considerable difficulties.—(Reuter.)

BATTLE IN CANTON SUBURBS

CHUNGKING, Friday. — On the South Kwangtung front a Chinese attack on Canton's outer defence line has been in progress for three days, says the Chinese communiqué. Fighting is centred on the north and north-east suburbs, where the Chinese have driven down in two columns. To relieve this pressure the Japanese have thrown 1,000 troops from positions about forty miles to the north-east in an effort to threaten the Chinese positions north-west of Canton. A furious battle is now raging in that sector. On the North Honan front Chinese, counter-attacking in the Chungow area, stormed the south and east gates of this important railway town on Tuesday evening. During the ensuing street fighting heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy.—(Reuter.)

DUTCH EAST INDIES AWAIT ATTACK

BATAVIA, Friday. — A major Japanese offensive against the Netherlands East Indies is a matter of days, or even hours, in the opinion of authoritative circles, who cite as evidence the daily flight of Japanese air patrols over the Archipelago. The Netherlands command is prepared for any development, and is confident and determined. The civilian front has been completely organised.

Meanwhile the despatch of air reinforcements from Australia to the Netherlands East Indies and the training of Dutch pilots in Australia have been among war measures discussed in Sydney by Dr. H. J. Van Mook, Lieutenant Governor-General of the Netherlands East Indies, and the Australian authorities.

PHILIPPINE BATTLE SLACKENS

WASHINGTON, Friday. — The War Department communiqué reports: "Philippine Theatre.—Combat operations dwindled to desultory skirmishes in various sections of the front.

"The enemy continues to move troops into the forward areas, apparently in preparation for a renewed attack in force.

"Hostile air activity yesterday was limited to reconnaissance flights.

"Nothing to report from other areas."—(Reuter.)

The Japanese claim to have sunk the United States aircraft tender Langley south-west of Johnston Island yesterday was described by naval circles as a "falsehood three times compounded." "The Japanese have claimed three times that the Langley has been sunk," a spokesman said. "They have still not been able to find out where it is. They are hoping that somebody will give away some secrets."—(Reuter.)

WASHINGTON, Friday.—The United States Navy Department announces the loss of the steamer, Ruth Alexander, of American President Lines, through a 'plane attack in Dutch East Indies waters.—(Reuter.)

MR. J. M. ANDREWS IN LONDON

The Right Hon. J. M. Andrews, Premier of Northern Ireland, arrived in London yesterday, accompanied by Mr. R. Gransden, Secretary to the Cabinet of Northern Ireland.

It is understood, says the Press Association, that Mr. Andrews has been called hurriedly for consultations with British Ministers.

Later the following statement was issued from the office of the Government of Northern Ireland in London: "Mr. J. M. Andrews visited Whitehall to-day in accordance with his practice of keeping in close touch with developments affecting Northern Ireland's part in the war effort. Mr. Andrews had a talk with the Home Secretary this afternoon."

BRITISH CRUISER SUNK BY U-BOAT

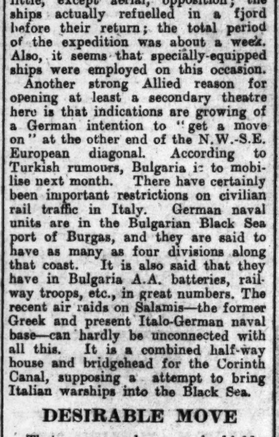
A British Admiralty report last night stated:—

"The Board of Admiralty regrets to announce that H.M.S. Galatea (Captain E. W. B. Sim, R.N.) has been torpedoed and sunk by a U-boat.

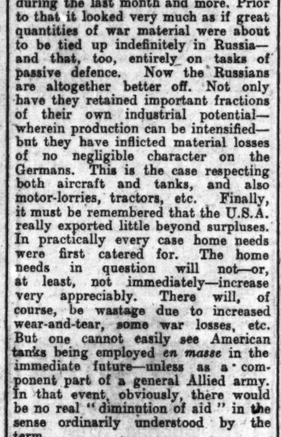
"The next-of-kin of casualties have been informed."

H.M.S. Galatea, a 5,220 tons cruiser of the Arethusa class, was completed on the Clyde in August, 1935, and had a normal complement of 450. She mounted six 6-inch, eight 4-inch A.A., two 3-pounder and seven smaller guns, as well as six 21-inch torpedo tubes. Her cost was £1,210,733, and she had a designed speed of 32.25 knots, with a reported cruising radius of 12,000 miles at economical speed.

Galatea carried one aircraft with catapult, and before the war served as flagship to the destroyer flotillas on the Mediterranean station. She saw service in the Mediterranean during the Spanish civil war.



Major-General George H. Brett, Chief of the United States Air Corps.



Lieutenant-General Sir Henry R. Pownall, Chief of Staff to General Wavell.

EUROPE—NORTH AND SOUTH

THE BRITISH RAIDS IN NORWAY

By Our Military Correspondent.

THE repeated minor successes—three in as many weeks—of Norwegian coast raids suggests the possibility of an Allied offensive of some magnitude in this theatre. The last Lofoten Island raid—following hard on the heels of the Vaagsoe one—was very instructive. It met with little, except aerial, opposition; the ships actually refuelled in a fjord before their return; the total period of the expedition was about a week. Also, it seems that specially-equipped ships were employed on this occasion.

Another strong Allied reason for opening at least a secondary theatre here is that indications are growing of a German intention to "get a move on" at the other end of the N.W.-S.E. European diagonal. According to Turkish rumours, Bulgaria is to mobilise next month. There have certainly been important restrictions on civilian rail traffic in Italy. German naval units are in the Bulgarian Black Sea port of Burgas, and they are said to have as many as four divisions along that coast. It is also said that they have in Bulgaria A.A. batteries, railway troops, etc., in great numbers. The recent air raids on Salamis—the former Greek and present Italo-German naval base—can hardly be unconnected with all this. It is a combined half-way house and bridgehead for the Corinth Canal, supposing a attempt to bring Italian warships into the Black Sea.

DESIRABLE MOVE

That some such move is highly desirable is quite clear from the recent course of the Crimea fighting. Here the Russians have staged a come-back that would have been absolutely impossible without naval superiority. The capture of Sebastopol was—and is—the one possibility still open to the Germans to wind up with a win in Russia. Instead of this, however, the garrison has launched important sorties—over and above the independent landings at numerous points.

Before analysing the Russian offensive return of the past month, a word about the closely-linked fighting in Libya may not be out of place. General Auchinleck's offensive—now in progress for some 7-8 weeks—has met with considerable, but not complete, success. At the outset he only partly and temporarily achieved his aim to plant his armoured fighting vehicles squarely across the enemy's communications. He did, however, inflict heavy casualties in men and material—including about 20,000 prisoners to date. He has also occupied Cyrenaica. The Axis stood again to fight a rearguard action at Jedabya, and for the second time succeeded in evading encirclement—which, indeed, was practically an impossibility on this occasion.

FIGHTING IN RUSSIA

In view of the present Russian advance, it seems desirable to examine its import—with a view to estimating their chances of holding really considerable German effectives in their front later on this year. The Germans just now are not exactly retiring "voluntarily"—nobody in war ever does quite that. But—as actual armies—they are not being "driven" back. Rearguards—strong rearguards, frequently—are being hustled, and losing considerable numbers and material. Units of Russian horse cavalry, with plenty of light artillery and machine-guns, are riding round them and isolating units. And—since the Germans are falling back—all this has the outward appearance of a German defeat.

But this is not to say that the Russians are equal to forcing a planned and fortified position-system adequately manned by troops of the technical skill and first-class armament of the Germans. The possibility cannot be ruled out that the Germans may collect means for quite a formidable offensive effort within the next few months.

POLISH TROOPS

The new Polish armies are likely to prove an important element in any offensive operations carried out by the Allies during 1942, because the Pole has always been constitutionally a good attacking soldier. Some information about these forces may accordingly prove of interest. The best organised and best equipped Polish army at the present time is that in Scotland (principally) under the command of General Marian Kukiel. It consists of some 4-6 divisions, organised in two Corps. It has recently received a first instalment of reinforcements from Canada, where another Polish army is being recruited from Poles living there and in the U.S.A. As to the Brigade in Libya—commanded by General Jan Kopanski—there has been a report that it was to be reorganised as a Panzer formation in the near future.

Regarding General Wladislaw Anders's army in Russia, it consisted some time ago of three divisions, with a force in process of formation. It was the intention of General Sikorski to raise six divisions—or even more, if proper facilities existed for equipping the troops. There are altogether in Russia something like 1½ millions of Poles of military age; but there is no point in enlisting them faster than they can be provided with arms and equipment. Consequently, recruitment was on a purely voluntary basis. Men were coming in at the rate of about a thousand a day. A considerable quantity of clothing, etc., has recently come from Britain for these troops.

U.S. AID TO ALLIES

An interesting speculation concerns the extent to which the actual participation of the U.S.A. in the war—and the initial reverses encountered—will interfere with material aid to the other Allies. It seems at least possible that the change in this respect may prove less far-reaching than might have been expected. For one thing, we may take it that there will be no more labour disputes—which, unquestionably, did at one time interfere very seriously with the total armament production. It is probable, therefore, that, from a greatly-boosted national output, there will accrue at least as large an export-quota as formerly.

Then, too, there is the very definite change in the Russian situation during the last month and more. Prior to that it looked very much as if great quantities of war material were about to be tied up indefinitely in Russia—and that, too, entirely on tasks of passive defence. Now the Russians are altogether better off. Not only have they retained important fractions of their own industrial potential—wherein production can be intensified—but they have inflicted material losses of no negligible character on the Germans. This is the case respecting both aircraft and tanks, and also motor-lorries, tractors, etc. Finally, it must be remembered that the U.S.A. really exported little beyond surpluses. In practically every case home needs were first catered for. The home needs in question will not—or, at least, not immediately—increase very appreciably. There will, of course, be wastage due to increased wear-and-tear, some war losses, etc. But one cannot easily see American tanks being employed en masse in the immediate future—unless as a component part of a general Allied army. In that event, obviously, there would be no real "diminution of aid" in the sense ordinarily understood by the term.

TANK BATTALIONS

For example, it would seem just as easy to send to China—or to Russia, for that matter—American Tank formations, as American tanks to be used by the Chinese or Russians. Especially would this be the case with the Chinese, who are almost entirely lacking in experience with these machines. By sending Tank battalions to China the Americans would be killing two birds with one stone. They would be equipping the Chinese with offensive armament, and at the same time acquiring valuable technical practice for subsequent application on a bigger scale by themselves. It would merely be an extension of the very sound policy of providing American fighter-aircraft protection for the Burma Road, which is already in operation.

SWEEPING CLAIMS BY RUSSIA

OFFENSIVE ALONG THE WHOLE FRONT

THE Russians, who claimed last night to be on the offensive along the whole front, announced the capture of the towns of Mosalsk—eighty miles south-east of Smolensk—Vetchino and Serpeysk.

According to Moscow radio: "The initiative has been torn from the enemy's hands; the German machine is broken. The Soviet Army will do its duty, and will smash the German invaders completely."

West of Moscow the battle of Mozhaisk is still raging, but Soviet reports indicate the re-occupation of more inhabited areas.

In the Crimea it is claimed that Russian troops, striking from all sides, "are cracking the enemy hold on Sebastopol," and threatening the retreat towards the narrow Perekop Isthmus.—(Associated Press and Reuter.)

NON-STOP ATTACKS

General Fedyuninsky, commander of a Red Army group in the Volkhov River area south-east of Leningrad, is launching non-stop attacks against the German defences, according to a Reuter telegram from Moscow last night. A front line despatch to Izvestia says that Soviet airmen, co-operating with the land forces, flying at low altitudes through snowstorms, have destroyed German infantry and columns of lorries and silenced two German field batteries. All German attempts to regain roads cut by the Soviets and to restore supply services to their garrisons are successfully thwarted.

The Germans are losing hundreds of officers and men in dead and wounded, the despatch continues. "Valuable testimony of these losses is supplied by war prisoners from German units which as yet have not participated in the fighting."

BREAK THROUGH ON MOSCOW FRONT

KUIBYSHEV, Friday.—Latest reports from the Moscow front says that General Rokossovsky's troops have broken through on the banks of an unnamed river, which had been fortified by the Germans to a depth of four miles. The Soviet penetration in some parts has reached midway through this zone. South of Moscow, after capturing eighty villages in a few days, Soviet troops fought their way round a place described as "O," and have driven the Germans into the outskirts, where fighting is going on. Four German regiments were routed.

Official Soviet reports say that more towns and villages have been occupied by the Russian troops on the Moscow front after violent fighting, in which some 7,000 German officers and men were killed.

There is no fresh news regarding the position at Mojaisk, last German bastion before Moscow.

In the Crimea, aided by Soviet aircraft, General Petrov's units, working their way out from the besieged Black Sea naval base of Sebastopol, are hitting hard on the German rear. A five mile advance has been made in one sub-sector, with the Russians retaking several strategic heights. Troop transports with reinforcements are arriving daily at Theodosia despite German bombings.

In the easternmost parts of the Crimea the Russians are advancing to link up with the troops landed at Eupatoria, in the West. Meanwhile, the railway between Rostov-on-Don and Moscow is now working again throughout its whole length. The first trains have already left Moscow for the front with New Year gifts, including lemons and other fruits, according to Pravda.

"CRITICAL PHASE," GERMAN PRESS CHIEF SAYS

BERNE, Friday. — An admission that "Germany's military operations have entered an extremely serious, and, indeed, critical, phase," is made by Dietrich, German Press Chief, in an article published in all German newspapers, according to the Berlin correspondent of the Swiss Press Telegraph Agency.

He assures the German people, however, that "Hitler will know how to overcome the crisis."

The Berlin correspondent of the National Zeitung says German Press accounts of the fighting in Russia have adopted a striking note of realism, detailing the hardships to which the troops are exposed.—(Reuter.)

"VICTORIOUS ADVANCE"

"The Red Army advances victoriously along the entire front," Kuibyshev radio announced. "The German Army is in full flight, leaving masses of equipment behind," Associated Press states.

In the Crimea the garrison at Sebastopol launched a violent attack against the German forces investing the city, and regained about five miles of territory, including one village, and inflicted severe losses. Aircraft of the Black Sea Fleet launched heavy attacks and inflicted severe losses in men and material on German troops in the Crimea.

The Red Army was aided by the Air Force and guerrillas as it fiercely hammered forward at the extremes of their line in a determined attempt to relieve Sebastopol and Leningrad.

IN THE CRIMEA

In the Crimea, the Russians were described as steadily advancing from the Kerch peninsula and "threatening communications at the Germans' rear, besieging Sebastopol." Defenders here were making continuous sorties to harass the Germans.

In the Crimea, Red Army troops, assisted by men of the Black Sea Fleet, opened a big offensive, recapturing many places. The offensive was still in progress, the Kuibyshev announcer said, and the Russians were advancing swiftly. Large quantities of arms and many enemy transports were captured.

MORE TOWNS RETAKEN

The Soviet midnight communiqué states:—

"During January 9 our troops in a number of sectors of the front, overcoming the enemy's resistance and inflicting blows on him, continued to advance, and occupied a number of inhabited localities, including the towns of Mosalsk, Vetchino and Serpeysk. The Germans are sustaining heavy losses.

"An enemy transport has been sunk in the Barents Sea."

Mosalsk—not to be confused with Mojaisk, says Reuter—is about 47 miles west of Kaluga, and 80 miles east south-east of Smolensk. The capture of Mosalsk represents a 20-mile Russian advance from Meshchovsk, the town captured two days ago. Serpeysk is just north of Mosalsk.

The supplement to the communiqué says:—"On January 8 our air units destroyed 7 enemy tanks, 1 armoured car and a large number of lorries, 38 guns with their crews, 475 waggons, 7 fuel-carrying lorries, several railway trucks and 2 munition dumps. They also dispersed and partly annihilated 7 battalions of infantry."

STORE CATTLE EXPORTS PROHIBITED FROM MONDAY NEXT

On and from Monday next, and until further notice, the export of store cattle to Britain and Northern Ireland will be prohibited, says an announcement from the Department of Agriculture. Only fat cattle for immediate slaughter, milch cows and springers will be permitted for export.

The communication adds that, as there will be no increase for at least three months in the prices to be paid by the British Ministry of Food for fat cattle, exporters are urged to arrange for the immediate shipment as "fats" of all surplus cattle which are fit for slaughter.

The purpose, as an official of the Department explained to an Irish Times representative, is to get as many as possible of the cattle out of the country before they deteriorate. Many of those in a forward condition are grass-feds, and the foodstuffs needed to continue the process as stall-feds is scarce and expensive.

FRENCH GENERALS RETIRED

VICHY, Friday.—Authorised circles stated that Admiral Darlan, Vice-Premier, had retired forty-two generals, and intended to recast the army administration "from top to bottom" before a new War Minister was named to replace the late General Huntziger.

The generals had all been retired since January 1, and authorised circles promised that more retirements would be forthcoming.—(Associated Press.)

THREE INJURED IN ROAD ACCIDENT

Three persons were admitted to the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital last night as the result of an accident near Santry involving a Dublin United Transport 'bus and a lorry. Patrick McNally, driver of the lorry, and Patrick Quinn, who was with him, were detained suffering from head injuries. They are both from Castleblaney. Patrick Dunn, the driver of the 'bus, was treated for shock and minor injuries and temporarily discharged.

WIFE'S EVIDENCE IN SWEETS CASE

Evidence that Patrick Molloy, of Ballinamore, Fintown, Co. Donegal, had had illicit intercourse with the wife of Private James Herron, whom he is charged with attempting to murder by causing poisoned sweets to be delivered to him, was given by the woman herself at Ballyshannon District Court yesterday. She said that Molloy used to go to the house before her husband was called up for service, and continued to call afterwards. On November 16th she gave birth to a dead-born child of which Molloy was the father. He had given her sums of money amounting to about £7 or £8. When her husband was on leave he found some letters written by Molloy, and left her to live with his sister.

Superintendent Convrey, Dungloe, who arrested the accused man, read a statement in which Molloy admitted having relationships with Mrs. Herron.

Mary Darcy (aged 11), a niece of James Herron, said that she never sent any sweets or cigarettes to her uncle, and never wrote "Mary Darcy" on a piece of paper.

MR. CAHIR HEALY'S DECLARATION

Mr. Cahir Healy, who was co-opted recently a member of the Fermanagh County Council, has made a declaration of the acceptance of office, and also taken the oath of allegiance to the King and the Northern Government before Sir Barry Domvile.

The Secretary reported to the County Council yesterday that Mr. James Cooper, Council's solicitor, held that this was irregular, as the oath of allegiance must be taken before the Secretary of the County Council, or, in case of absence or illness, a deputy appointed by him, who has taken the same oath of allegiance. He did not know how Sir Barry Domvile was, or what his qualifications were to take documents. It was agreed to send Mr. Cooper's letter to Mr. Healy.

PREPARING FOR RATIONING REGISTRATION FORMS RETURNED

The forms for National Registration in Eire, which were distributed on the 16th November last, have been returned by the enumerators, and the Statistical Branch of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry is engaged in checking and examining them as a preliminary to the possibility of rationing of bread and other commodities.

Altogether 750,000 householders' schedules were distributed and collected by the enumerators, who performed a difficult and intricate task in an efficient and speedy manner. It will take some little time, however, before the final result of the registration will be available, although considerable strides have been made in the Department for bringing into operation, when necessary, a rationing scheme.

STEPHANIE IS BORN

AND CHARLIE HAS PNEUMONIA

By Our Animal Reporter.

A LITTLE tawny ball of fur, with pathetic eyes, whimsically drooping mouth and an unexpected snarl that carries more than a hint of "the shape of things to come" in the way of hearty, full-blooded roars—that's Stephanie, daughter of Noreen, one of the Zoo's open-air lions.

Stephanie, so called because St. Stephen's Day was her birthday, was just fourteen days old yesterday. She is so small that one wonders why she is not scared of her formidable mother—but I expect Stephanie and Noreen have an understanding on one or two points.

A curious commentary on animal instinct: Cairbre, Stephanie's father, belonging to the 20th generation of the Dublin line of lions, all of whom were born and spent their lives on hard wooden boards, now behaves in his open-air enclosure with as much delicacy as does pussy in the back garden.

Poor Charlie is not looking so well at the moment. I went up to visit him yesterday, and a more dismal chimpanzee it would be difficult to imagine! Pneumonia is the trouble: or perhaps I should say was the trouble, because Charlie, happily, has now been pronounced out of danger.

He still looks very peaky and listless, crouching in one corner of the indoor section of his house. He accepted a scratch, a sweet and some words of sympathy. When Mr. Flood was not looking, he took the opportunity of telling me about a grievance: "I'm still a bit weak and hoarse," he said, and shook his head, dolefully. "Injections, that's what did it. Stuck a needle into me when I wasn't looking . . . M and B 693, they called it. . . ."

Overhearing this, Mr. Flood came forward with the explanation. Charlie had refused to take his medicine by mouth, and had later objected to the alternative of the hypodermic. When, however, he had been netted, held down forcibly, and injected once or twice, he learned his lesson. Succeeding doses of M and B 693 were docilely swallowed.

Space is running short. It being summer time in Australia now, the emus have decided to ignore our calendar, and they have produced an egg—the first to be laid in the Zoo for many long years. The annual meeting of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland will be held on Thursday, January 29th, at the College of Surgeons, when a feature will be "A Day at the Zoo," with coloured cine-films by Mr. C. A. Jones and a commentary by Mr. T. H. Mason. The meeting will be open free to the public.

The Steam-Roller

While the latest recruit to the "Axis" Powers seems to be having a series of comparatively easy victories in Malaya, the tide of war in Russia is running strongly at the moment against the Germans. Even when all due allowance has been made for exaggeration, and for that condition of mind known in popular jargon as "wishful thinking," the fact is that, from the White Sea to the Black Sea, along a front of about fifteen hundred miles, the initiative has been wrested from Herr Hitler's forces. The Russians, who, according to all the recognised rules of warfare, ought to have been suing for peace three months ago, are advancing virtually all along the line. Russia's organised resistance, which officially was smashed beyond repair last August, is developing new force and new enterprise, with the result that the whole complexion of the campaign has been changed. It would be easy to over-rate the importance of the Russian counter-offensive. As yet there is no question of a German rout, or even of a major German defeat. Herr Hitler's General Staff still is in complete control of its enormous armies, which are retreating in full order; but the fact is that they are retreating, whereas a few months ago they were advancing at almost breathless speed. Three main factors have contributed to this dramatic change in the fortunes of war. In the first place, the Germans, after their spectacular victories against the French and in the Balkans, undoubtedly over-estimated their own powers. They set their minds upon certain objectives in Russia, and, having been delayed in Yugoslavia, Greece, and Crete, resolved to maintain their time-table at all costs. They were determined to reach the Caucasian oilfields before the onset of the Russian winter; and, when Marshal Budyenny's Southern Army was routed, the German commander, ignoring the fact that Marshal Timoshenko was lying in wait for him with newly organised forces, pressed recklessly forward, only to find his way barred by excellent troops, whose leaders displayed remarkable qualities of military initiative. In the next place, the Germans under-estimated the fighting powers of their opponents. For this mistake political propaganda was at least partly to blame. The Russians had been regarded for so long as a mere rabble of semi-civilised conscripts, without proper leadership, without modern equipment, and, above all, without any stomach for fighting, that the Germans were inclined to treat them almost with contempt. Not for the first time in military history, the Russian soldier confounded all his critics; and those German generals who believed that they would be in Moscow within a few weeks of the opening of the attack last June have re-learned a lesson that never ought to have been forgotten. Finally, the Russian winter has played its part again. The Germans have taken every possible precaution to safeguard themselves against bad weather, and it is safe to say that any other army in the world would have been smashed by climatic conditions long ago; but even the Germans have been forced to admit temporary defeat by "General Winter," and recent losses must have been prodigious.

The vastness of the Russo-German front makes it almost impossible to form an accurate picture of the military position at the moment. The Germans assert that they are retreating planmässig, according to plan; that they are shortening their line deliberately in order not only to facilitate their lines of communication, but also to prepare themselves for a decisive attack against the Russians in the spring. The impartial observer must recognise that there is some element of truth in this assertion. The line as it stood at the beginning of December was impossible to maintain throughout a winter campaign. It was a mass of dangerous salients, and even the merest novice in military affairs realised from the outset that there must be withdrawals here and there on one side or the other. On the other hand, there can be very small doubt that the seizure of the initiative by the Russian High Command at the psychological moment was totally unexpected by the Germans, and that, in some cases, at any rate, the withdrawals which were intended to be voluntary have been turned into a forced retreat. The movement may be said to have started at Rostov-on-Don, which was captured prematurely by the Germans in their anxiety to reach the Caucasus. Marshal Timoshenko proved himself to be a military genius when he prepared and threw into the conflict in the Southern Ukraine freshly-trained divisions from Eastern Russia, the very existence of which seems to have been unknown to the Germans. Not only has Rostov been re-taken, but the German force in the Crimea has been placed in a perilous position. The Russian garrison in Sebastopol has been making daring sorties during the last week or so; and the latest reports suggest that, unless Marshal von Rundstedt executes a strategic withdrawal, his troops in the Crimea may become isolated. In the centre, German pressure on Moscow has been relieved to an extent that would have been incredible six weeks ago. General Zhukov has made excellent use of the forces at his disposal, and, taking full advantage of the weather conditions, has hoisted General von Bock with his own petard—namely, by the skilful application of the famous "pincers" technique. For the moment, at any rate, the German threat to Moscow has been removed. To what extent von Bock's retreat may prove to be a major reverse remains to be seen. In the North Ritter von Leeb's hold on Leningrad no longer is as powerful as it was. The fact that the British Foreign Secretary travelled by train on the Murmansk-Soroka railway, and afterwards to Moscow, shows that all communications between the capital and the Northern front are not destroyed; and the Finns, who are facing the full fury of a new Russian offensive on their sector of the line, find themselves in an unenviable position. It is too soon yet to speak, or even to think, of a decision on the Russian front. Nearly three months of winter remain, and at the end of that time anything may happen. Both sides have suffered, and are suffering, appalling losses; but they both have colossal resources, which will be taxed to the uttermost in the spring.

"Soccer"

The public which pays to see Rugby or Association football games at the week-ends expects to be entertained just as certainly as the public that goes to theatre or cinema. There are, of course, enthusiastic supporters of particular clubs who attend their favourites' matches no matter how badly the clubs may be faring, or how poor may be the style of football that they are playing. In Dublin, however, there is a great sporting public which is attached to no one club more than another, and goes to the ground where it expects to see the best football. It has no ties of club loyalty, and, when the standard of the game generally shows a decline, it refuses to waste an afternoon watching listless or mediocre displays. This is most noticeable in the case of Association football, where the attendances at city matches may vary from a couple of hundreds to twenty-five thousand. As a result of many disappointing displays in the early part of the present season, there had been a notable decrease in the interest of the game's supporters, and, while this may have been more marked at some grounds rather than others, it seemed that attendances in the aggregate were not as great as they were last year. Matches between old rivals, which used to create noisy excitement in well-filled stands and packed terraces, were being watched with apathy by comparatively sparse crowds. Suddenly that phase has ended, and, unless there is a relapse in the form of the leading clubs, "soccer" is certain to enjoy a spell of great popularity in the coming weeks. Two games, in particular, seemed to stir interest, the meetings of Shamrock Rovers and St. James's Gate and of Shelbourne and Cork United, so that, when Rovers met Cork on the following Sunday, the attendance reached a new record for the 1941-1942 season. This game proved worthy of the attendance, with the result that another attendance record was established when Rovers met Shelbourne. Once again the fare was excellent. The public felt that it was getting full value for its money. It can be said safely that there has been more talk about the game in the last three weeks than there had been in the four preceding months, and the prospects for the rest of the League of Ireland campaign, as well as for the Cup competition, which opens next month, are brighter than anybody imagined.

Fine Feathers

This is the age of "children in uniform." All over the world men, women and children—particularly children—are donning uniforms and going forth, if not to war, at any rate to military training. For the most part the uniforms have assumed a dull and drab, although undeniably utilitarian, aspect. They have, indeed, become so drab that nowadays, although a large percentage of the population of Great Britain is in uniform, the only regalia with any of the old magnificence is that worn by the lofty gentlemen who guard the doorways of hotels, restaurants and cinemas. According to the British newspapers, it has been suggested that all such uniforms should, in the interests of economy, be superseded by arm-bands for the duration of the war. This is indeed bad news. It is true that the regalia may be unnecessarily splendid for the frugal times; it is true that usually they are designed on the pattern of a cavalry officer in the Imperial Army of some Middle European State and have a musical comedy flavour which is somewhat out of keeping with the wartime atmosphere; it is true that in many cases these trappings are a little the worse for wear, and that the brilliant gold braid too often is offset by threadbare cuffs and collars; nevertheless it would be a great pity to see them disappear, when for years they have afforded the plain people of England with their only glimpses of martial pomp apart from occasions such as the Coronation and the Aldershot Tattoo. That they should disappear is bad enough, but that they should be replaced by arm-bands, is, to put it mildly, "the last straw." Do the authorities really believe that these proud specimens of manhood who for years have been accustomed to sporting the costume of Captains of the Imperial Guard of Ruritania, would agree without protest to continue to do their duty dressed in a modest lounge suit with an inconspicuous band upon their arms; do the authorities think, for that matter, that any normal human would pay the slightest attention to a doorman if he were not dressed to suit the part. Caparisoned, the average doorman is unassailable in his magnificence; without it he is just another man, possessing no plenary powers and commanding no respect. Economy may be necessary at the present time, but to deprive these splendid fellows of their fine feathers would be a small economy, unlikely to pay.

KIRWAN HOUSE ORPHANAGE

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES

The annual prize distribution and entertainment at Kirwan House Female Orphanage, North Circular road, Dublin, took place yesterday afternoon, when there was a large attendance of friends of the House. Mr. H. D. Packe-Beresford presided, and the prizes were distributed by the Hon. Mrs. Archer.

The Governors present were:—Mrs. Colley (Vice-president), Mrs. and Miss Ferrar, Mrs. Warham, Mrs. Pollock, the Rev. R. G. F. Jenkins, B.D.; Mr. Richard B. Fowler and Mr. A. T. Barber. Apologies for unavoidable absence were received from the Archbishop of Dublin (Most Rev. Dr. Barton), President of the Board of Governors; Mrs. Darley Miller, Mr. G. H. Parkes, Canon E. H. F. Campbell, the Rev. W. J. Mayne, Mrs. Barton, Miss R. Brooke, Lady HolmPatrick, the Countess of Meath, Lady Franks, Lady Nugent and Lady Ball.

The annual report of the Governors, submitted by the chaplain and registrar, the Rev. Arthur P. Armstrong, stated that the matter which gave the Governors most anxiety during the year was the question of the children's safety in the event of this country being involved in hostilities. It was with great relief and gratitude that they were informed by Captain R. H. Fowler, of Rahinston, Co. Meath, that he was not only prepared to lend his house in Rathmolyon to the Governors for the duration of the war, but also he was prepared to place the top of his own house at their disposal. The offer was accepted with alacrity, and the Board then decided to fall in with the Government's suggestion to send the children for their summer holiday to Rathmolyon, and they remained there until September, and all returned much better for their holiday.

After distributing the prizes, the Hon. Mrs. Archer said she was pleased to find in the House a Girl Guide company and a Brownie pack.

FRED HIGGINS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—With great pleasure I read in your paper to-day the report of Brinsley MacNamara's fine tribute to the memory of F. R. Higgins. Fred was, indeed, a "good poet": a great writer with a mind full of noble and generous thoughts and pictures of the world; and with magical words in which to express them. Only his friends know how much he was as well as that. His poetry was in the great tradition, but coloured with his personality till it became unique. He did something for Ireland that should not be forgotten. There will never be a better time to remember it than now, when the F. R. Higgins Memorial Fund is still open, and far from full. May I, being Chairman, trespass to say that the organiser's name and address are: Seumas O'Doherty, 30 Claude road, Dublin? A subscription would do honour to the dead poet, and to the giver.—Yours, etc.,

LYNN DOYLE.

The other addresses will be given on the successive Sundays. On January 18th at the 3.30 Service the subject will be "The Church in France," and the address will be given by the Rev. Dr. Emerson. On January 25th the Dean will preach on "The Church in China" at the 3.30 Service, and on February 1st, also at the 3.30 Service, the subject will be "The Church in India and Burmah," and the address will be given by the Rev. R. C. B. Clarke, who spent a large part of his ministry in India.

IRISH ART IN CARLOW

A great deal of local interest has been caused by the opening yesterday, in Carlow Technical Institute, of an exhibition of contemporary Irish artists' work. It has been arranged by Mr. Peter J. Brennan, A.N.C.A., last year's Taylor Scholarship winner, who has some pieces of sculpture on view. Mr. Brennan has recently taken up the position of art instructor in the Institute, and in other technical schools in Carlow and Kilkenny. He hopes by its kind ever held in the Carlow-Kilkenny area—to arouse a greater interest in art in the district.

Among those who attended the exhibition yesterday were:—Mr. Lawrence Campbell, R.H.A.; Mr. Maurice McGonigal, R.H.A.; Mr. Harry Kernoff, R.H.A.; Mr. S. Colman, Miss Carmell Flynn, Mr. C. Galbally, Mr. H. Haly, Mr. T. Nisbett and Mr. Fergus O'Ryan.

The exhibition will be open until Friday next. It will then be moved to the City Technical Institute, Kilkenny, where it will be open from January 19 until January 24.

LONDON LETTER

59 FLEET STREET, LONDON.
FRIDAY NIGHT.

MR. R. S. HUDSON, the Minister for Agriculture, wants to see more cows fed from the brewery. A strong recommendation has gone out from his department in favour of giving them "wet grains," which is what barley is called after it has done its job of making beer. At eighteen shillings and ninepence a ton, "ex mill or store," the grains are one of the few feeding-stuffs obtainable at anything like pre-war price, but demand has been very slow in spite of the fact, which should have influence, that they are obtainable without coupons. Because wet grains contain fifty per cent. more nutriment than silage, which is being sold freely for thirty shillings a ton, they represent excellent value. This stimulating food was a popular feed for cattle long ago, and there are records of it being used in 1881, when a cow used to be given one bushel a day. About 28 lbs. should be enough to balance the rest of the war-time diet in these days.

Film of Irish Memory

"Quidnunc's" correspondent in Thursday's issue was not strictly correct in thinking that Mr. Churchill was born in the Private Secretary's Lodge in the Phœnix Park. This auspicious event took place on November 30, 1874, at Blenheim Palace, Woodstock, Oxfordshire, home of his great ancestor, John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough. But Mr. Churchill's earliest memories are of Ireland, to which his father went as Secretary to his grandfather, the Duke of Marlborough, when the Duke was appointed Lord Lieutenant by Disraeli in 1876, and in "The Little Lodge," a stone's throw from the Viceregal Lodge, Winston spent nearly three years of childhood, leaving early in 1879. He remembers his grandfather unveiling the Gough statue in 1878. "A great black crowd, scarlet soldiers on horseback, strings pulling away a brown shiny sheet, the old Duke, the formidable grandpapa talking loudly to the crowd," is how he describes his first coherent memory. Other events which stand out are a pantomime he was to have attended. The long looked-for afternoon arrived, but when he and his parents arrived at Dublin Castle to pick up other children it was learnt that the theatre had been burnt down. All that was found of the manager were the keys that had been in his pocket. Mr. Churchill can to-day give clear descriptions of Emo Park, then the seat of Lord Portarlington, which he visited when just over four years old.

Axis of "Democracy"

What may be called the Axis of the "democratic" Powers is to-day the broad mall extending westwards from Washington to the Potomac River. Widespread on either side are the huge buildings in which direction of the whole war effort of the anti-Axis Powers is now concentrated. From all parts of the United States people have been pouring into the capital since the national defence drive began at the rate of over 100,000 a year. Now that America is "all in," the rate of increase in recent weeks has leapt still higher. Every train pul

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

The Irish Catholic Front

The Capuchin Annual for 1942

BY PATRICK KAVANAGH

The Capuchin Annual, 1942. Edited by Father Senan, Capuchin Periodicals. 10/6 net.

HERE is my review of the "Capuchin Annual," which "pressure on space" kept out last week. It is substantially the same as the original. So I will leave it at that and see what is to be thought of this revival of interest in art and letters which has been taking place in Irish Catholic circles during recent years. Is it a good or bad thing for religion pure and simple? Can the beauty that is truth come out of cruelty and lust? If we accept a work of art as good, if it produces a good effect, we may be subscribing to the Machiavellian doctrine that the means is justified by the end. Can an evil tree bring forth good fruit? Why must so many of the poor and simple be prostituted on the altar of Apollo if Art is not inimical to charity. And it is not only Christianity. Plato saw the argument and he abandoned the poet.

The Hangers-on

What has all this to do with the "Capuchin Annual?" you may ask. I can answer: plenty. See the wonderful "Virgin And Child" by some great master. How many damned souls (in either the Platonic or Christian sense) brought forth its magical colours? If we are to have a renaissance in art, literature and music it is essential that we realise what we are letting ourselves in for.

I am not to be taken as referring to this particular magazine if I suggest here that all new things like artistic revivals and arrivals are like new shops in a district: they attract all the bad pays, all the disreputable. Yet even allowing for that, there is still a margin of doubt as to whether art is not the devil's brew. I don't believe it is, and I believe that this name has never been earned for it by the greatest men like Shakespeare or Dante. It is only the hangers-on, the dirty tail that has given rise to the legend.

For the good are always the clever
Save by an evil chance.

The Mouthpieces of Piety

The fiction that a man could never be a good Catholic and a true artist or poet at the same time was given additional credibility by certain groups and newspapers in this country who made anti-literature a plank in their platforms. Whenever an Irish writer wrote a book that was not in slavish yes-man agreement with their illiterate ideas of Catholicism he was sure to be damned by some scribbler who had failed to make the grade among the pagans. Who are as a rule the mouthpieces of piety here? The washed-up, the female-emotional who would die of exhaustion on the cold, high ledges of real creative thought. Little girls who should be at home nursing babies or cooking the dinner, and shadowy journalists from the Continent of Europe, are to be found within the covers of every Catholic paper you take up. In England the reverse is the case. Of course I recognise that the female debaucher of culture and society is not an Irish or Catholic development.

Accepting that the highest manifestations of mind are the very essence of religion, I will say that for the work that is being done to put things in a proper perspective it is to Father Senan and his associates of Capuchin Periodicals that the greater praise must belong. For many years he has been the most enthusiastic and generous patron of writers and artists. If he has sometimes patronised the wrong sort it is to be regretted. True patronage consists as much—if not more—in keeping the wrong kind down as in assisting the right kind up. You can form a better opinion of the merits of an institution by the people who are excluded than by the ones included. Just like our Irish Radio which boasts having all the best people on its programmes. It has all the worst, too, and the lowest mentality sets the metronome. So why wonder at vulgarity?

Mediæval Anti-Clericalism

In the Capuchin Annual, 1942, there are many excellent items—for example, the fifty pages of delightful photographs of Irish scenery by the Rev. F. M. Browne, S.J., and three reproductions in colour of Jack Yeats pictures. These two items justify the magazine.

There is an article on mediæval literature by the Rev. Stephen J. Browne, S.J., which, though it is a sort of catalogue, has a few original ideas that are pertinent to our time. In discussing mediæval anti-clericalism he says: "This anti-clericalism for the most part differed wholly from modern anti-clericalism.

Avowed anti-clericals of our time are nearly always anti-Catholic in reality. They hate priests and religious for being what the Church expects them to be. The mediæval anti-clerical satirised them for not being such."

There is a good deal of truth in that. None the less, there is some of the mediæval sort of anti-clericalism, especially in the rural parts of Ireland. And this anti-clericalism has been the cause of much foolish hope among anti-Catholics, who see in the near future an Ireland won over to the new paganism.

This anti-clericalism of the plain people is not without its dangers; for, from being a constructive criticism, it is capable of changing into something vicious, as we have seen in one European country recently. And this danger arises chiefly through the sense of injustice that can be born of the abuse of clerical privilege. The danger is small, but it is there.

The Irish Writer

To what extent enthusiasm for a religious or national cause can lead a man is to be seen in an article called "Twilight And Dawn." Here the writer has put on so much emotional steam that the engine has run off the tracks into a bog. Some of the writing, which is mainly about Canon Sheehan and Patrick Pearse, is worthy of Mrs. Amanda Ross:

> The spawn of Protestantism has fouled the pools of the world with the croaking from the ugly mouths of all the isms of evil.
> O Padraig Mac Piarias, immortal English Irishman, would to God your words were read. Would to God we were not afraid of our shadows to force the chalice of limpid Gaelic into the arteries of our young.

In another article the Irish writer is described as a man who portrays his people as scoundrels and everything evil for the purpose of making money in the English and American markets. In fact, the boot is very much on the other foot. One doesn't need to be an admirer of the last two books of James Joyce to realise that it was his artistic (spiritual) honesty that brought him to poverty and a grave in a foreign land. "Woe to the man with projecting unfathomables in his being," wrote Amiel. Joyce said he would fight the world with "silence, exile and cunning." If he had been really cunning he would have stayed at home and written for the Saturday Evening Post.

Writers are jeered at who complain that they are unable to get a living in this country. Is it not a downright fact? I myself have been writing verse for many years, but do you think I'd get a job in preference to a fly-boy from London—or even better—Central Europe?

Poems

On the less controversial side of the "Capuchin Annual" there is a twenty-page sequence of poems by M. J. Labern. These poems are about as good as any religious verse that has appeared in this country during the past ten years. Some of the other verse is so bad that I shouldn't be surprised to hear of a few more "poets" approaching a Dublin printer with a view to having a book brought out. This form of vanity, I am told, can be indulged in for as little as forty pounds.

Other items worth noting are an article on the secret cipher of Dublin Castle by P. J. Little, a whimsical cartoon by C. E. Kelly, and a sentimental play by the gentle and witty editor of "Dublin Opinion," Tom Collins. This issue of the "Capuchin Annual" is largely the quarter-century commemoration number of 1916 and after. There are seventy or more pages of political photographs, with the emphasis heavily anti-Treaty.

How I blame my father for not doing one day's fighting for Ireland instead of fifty years' hard work. If he had, he would have a "good national record," and so would I by his proxy, be I ever so contemptible. I might misquote John Bunyan: The milk and honey of easy, well-paid jobs are beyond the wilderness of the ruined G.P.O. and the burned-out Custom House.

Big Business Sentimentality

And that is not one-fifth of what is to be found within the Sean O'Sullivan covers of the monster (700 pag-s) issue of the "Capuchin Annual" for 1942.

MR. PATRICK KAVANAGH.

Suffering from big business sentimentality and sometimes disturbing in its look of power, it is an amazing phenomenon of modern political Catholic Ireland.

A final tribute must be paid to the printers, to Father Senan again and his assistant, Father Gerard. If I have said hard things it is because I believe that Capuchin Periodicals can do a great job in this country if only there was more selectiveness.

Intellectually, the Catholic Church in Ireland is in a weak position, and not because the intellects are unavailable, but because there is no sense of critical appraisement to select the clear, shining diamond from the dross of sentimentality, pretence and unthinking piety.

A New Poetic Farce

"Genuine Theatre and Genuinely Amusing"

Review by Roibeárd O Farachain

Black Fast: a Poetic Farce in One Act. By Austin Clarke. Dublin: The Orwell Press, 1941. 3/6 net.

Dublin Poets and Artists: No. 3: The Straying Student. Gayfield Press, Dublin, 1941. 1/- net.

A PREFATORY not, "Black Fast," reminds us that "The seventh century controversy over the exact date of Easter had its lighter moments, according to the Venerable Bede. The culinary complications in this play were suggested by some pages of his ecclesiastical history."

That is the source of the story which shows us the household of Conall More of Ulster, convulsed by the divided allegiance of the king and the queen, one maintaining the old date to be right, the other the new; so that one fasts while the other feasts. The climax of the play is a learned dispute on the question between Ulster and Munster monks.

Hearty Laughs

The play had its first production in the Abbey Theatre on December 28th, and the chuckles, laughter and applause of the audience proved definitely what was obvious enough from a reading of the play, that it is genuine theatre and genuinely funny. It must be a long time since an audience here or elsewhere was given hearty laughs by a verse-play. Apart from its humour, one is delighted by the rich, shining images and ripe diction of the work, which is the nearest thing to his own "Son of Learning" which Austin Clarke has done. The only pity is that there is not more of it.

The third booklet of the Dublin Poets and Artists series comprises a single poem by Austin Clarke and a woodcut by Mainie Jellett. The poem, "The Straying Student," I have heard praised in the highest terms, but it is not one of my favourites among the poet's lyrics. Interesting it undoubtedly is, but part of the interest is in puzzling out some of the allusions; and the undoubted style and passion of the poem do not completely compensate me for the puzzling. But, as I say, it has won esteem.

The decorative piece by Mainie Jellett made no esthetic impression on me.

Letters To An Amateur

G. B. Shaw, W. B. Yeats and Florence Farr

BY LENNOX ROBINSON

Florence Farr, Bernard Shaw and W. B. Yeats. Edited by Clifford Bax. Dublin: The Cuala Press. 18/- net.

> "Dear Miss Farr,
> I have just seen the poster. I think it looks awfully jolly. Would you kindly send me a few copies, I should like to have 6 if I may. I look forward with much interest to the opening of your season at the Avenue.
> Yours sincerely,
> Aubrey Beardsley."

SO runs the letter pinned to the beautiful Beardsley poster which faces me every evening as I work at the Abbey Theatre. The plays announced on the poster are John Todhunter's "A Comedy of Sighs"—a forgotten play—which is preceded by a "New and Original play in One Act" entitled "The Land of Heart's Desire," by W. B. Yeats—the latter play has not been forgotten. Mr. James Welch ("When Knights Were Bold") appeared in both plays; Miss Farr in both casts, it was her theatrical adventure. The date is March, 1894.

"Awfully Ninetyish"

I have been told that this poster was considered daring, even improper, in 1894; now it seems simple and beautiful and could not raise a frisson in any young man or woman. But doesn't that letter, the 'Mifs,' the 'awfully jolly' stamp Florence Farr and what she belonged to; make her so 'awfully' ninetyish, so Yellow-Bookish, so-amateurish?

Which is not to deny that out of that fin-de-siécle period things came which were the beginning of a new century, things terrific and important. George Bernard Shaw came, and W. B. Yeats and Thomas Hardy, and H. G. Wells and many another. But, undoubtedly, there was an amateurish touch about many people who belonged to those years, and Florence Farr seems to have had that graceful, amateurish touch.

The Woman

The letters in the book under discussion are signed G. B. S. and W. B. Y., and for this reason the slim volume assumes an almost magical importance. Who was this woman, we can well ask, who could make such people as Shaw and Yeats write to her—perhaps, fall in love with her? Who was she who acted and was one of the first Ibsenite players in England, who was never successful as an actress, who went to India in her middle-age with the shadow of death on her, taught a school there, and died?

Lately, a friend of mine has been bringing to life Henriette, Ernest Renan's sister, and has made a lovely and interesting book about her. In fifty years' time someone will, perhaps, do the same thing with Florence Farr. People like her may not be very important, but, somehow, they impinge, they "belong."

She had, in her youth, great beauty; otherwise Bernard Shaw, that Irish philanderer ("as loveless as an Irishman," as the Scotch-Gaelic saying goes), could not have written to her those empty, philandering letters. Mr. Clifford Bax, who writes the preface to this book, cannot forget—and he did not know her till she was fifty—"her starry eyes." I met her about the same time. I don't remember her eyes. She had charm as a woman, but as an actress she was a slovenly player. An amateur.

The Actress

The Shaw letters, philandering apart, attack her for all the amateurish qualities I found in her acting. She "sugars," she crisps her fingers from the knuckles, "when," he says, "you should swing your whole arm from the shoulder, and your whole voice becomes easy and off-hand when the wretched audience and manager want to hear the tocsin in it."

She came to Dublin in 1911 to play the First Musician in Yeats's "Deirdre." She played it again in London, and blew her nose in her gown. That might have been a good, a realistic gesture in "Deirdre of the Sorrows," it was completely wrong in Yeats's version of the story. It stamped her an amateur.

"Too Intelligent"

To defend her non-success, or only half-success on the stage, her friends would say to her: "You are too intelligent to be a great actress," or, as Mr. Clifford Bax puts it, "she had too much personality to become a good actress." Which is all poppy-cock. Great intelligence may not be necessary to a great player, but idiocy is not an essential. Was Mrs. Patrick Campbell an idiot, was Tree, is F. J. McCormick?

Florence Farr simply had not got that quality which all great artists must have, that of taking infinite pains over their work. As "First Musician" she would speak her lines beautifully, then when Musician faded out of the play she would grow bored, lose touch, and—not because she desired to be central figure, but from ennui—blow her nose on her dress.

> "I have always known there was something I disliked about singing, but now at last I know why. I have found something better. A friend has been here a few minutes ago, has sat with a beautiful stringed instrument upon her knees, her fingers passing over the strings, and has spoken some poems."

Thus Yeats, in 1909, in his lecture to the Cork Literary and Scientific Society in the November of that year. I listened—I was young, I was captivated by Yeats, but not so much by Florence Farr and her psaltery.

Vague Arpeggios

Here is G. B. S. on the same subject:—

> "The psaltery amuses some people; and there is no reason why they should not use a string or a pipe to remind them of the normal pitch of their voices. But for practical teaching the old usage remains; take care of the vowels and the consonants will take care of themselves. You want to get, first, an articulate articulation . . . That is the only thing that makes speech tolerable. Without it cantillation can do nothing except intensifying ordinary twaddling into a nerve-destroying crooning like the maunderings of an idiot-banshee."

Yet Florence Farr's vague arpeggios did fit his early "embroidered" lyrics, "Impetuous heart, be still, be still," or Aleel's songs in "The Countess Cathleen."

The Music of Yeats

Yeats, though he pretended that he hated musicians, was intensely musical. He once told me that he made all his poems to one or other of two tunes, and he hummed them over to me, and I could make neither head nor tail of them. Early in life he thought that he found in Florence Farr and her psaltery something that matched his early imagination; later he found some secret music peculiar to himself; at the very end he found his music in Irish ballad-metre.

Florence Farr would probably have hated his later tunes, and would not have understood them. But here is a small book about her, too important to ignore. It is the portrait of an enigma, the portrait of an inspired Amateur, who at any rate evoked from G.B.S. the hardest sense that can be told and told again to any budding player.

MISS FLORENCE FARR.

Reconstruction After the War

Out of the People. By J. B. Priestley. London: Heinemann and Collins. 2/6 net.

THIS is the first of a new series of "Vigilant" books, published jointly by Messrs. Heinemann and Collins. This series will deal with problems of reconstruction after the war, and it is proposed to devote the next five or six volumes to general surveys of the problem by eminent writers.

The first of the series, "Out of the People," gives Mr. Priestley an admirable opportunity to speak his mind free of the restrictions of war-time broadcasting. This he does with great effect, and the book makes a readable and lucid survey of the problem of reconstruction, in the course of which he proves—or attempts to prove—that democracy is the only practicable alternative to the "Master and Masses" system—that of Totalitarianism.

It is a most interesting and, no doubt, instructive booklet, but one cannot help feeling that the author of so many great books is rather wasting his talent writing such a book.

BOOKS, THICK AND THIN

AN END TO EXTRAVAGANCE

SOME WARTIME ECONOMIES

AFTER what the Americans would term a "short vacation," I return to scatter my literary wild oats upon the stony ground of the Book Page.

In the interim I have attempted to read some Victorian novels, the sort of things that everybody "just must read some time," and nobody seems to do anything further about it. I use the word, "attempted," because, although I made valiant efforts to cope with a selection of stout volumes, I never got very much further than the first ten or twelve pages.

The trouble was not that the stuff was particularly boring, or that the books were too long; it was purely a matter of the print. The print is so small that three or four times the usual number of words can be fitted on to one page, and consequently one has to read through a solid wad of back-chat, equivalent to six or seven pages of a normal novel before one is able to turn over the page. And I love turning over pages.

A New Horizon

Nothing affords me greater pleasure, especially when reading a novel, than the periodical rustle as one folds back the new page and scans, as it were, a new horizon. It is one of the most gratifying sounds in the world, and the pleasure derived from it is something akin to that with which the mountaineer, having scaled a lofty peak, regards the base degrees by which he did ascend, and turns his attention to the next peak.

For that reason, I always like a book with a wide margin and large print; as a matter of fact, if all of the Victorian novels had been printed in this fashion I could quite conceivably read the dullest of them from cover to cover, if not with pleasure, at any rate, with interest, in spite of the fact that in such a format each novel probably would fill half-a-dozen volumes.

Making the Most of It

Of course, this wide margin stuff can be carried too far. Ever since Eric Gill and his co-mates let fall a few chance remarks about the ethics of printing, the people of this country—and, indeed, of most other countries—have become "type-conscious," which means that a poet has only got to jot down a handful of odd poems and he will find a dozen artistic publishers straining at the leash to publish them for him—at his own expense, of course—in book form, one poem to a page, a blank every second page, not to mention the fifty-seven varieties of fly-leaves, title-sheets, wood-cuts and credit lists.

That sort of thing was all very well in peace-time when paper was not worth the treaties that were printed on it; the blank spaces could be used for collecting autographs, writing foot-notes or plain "doodling."

"Slim and Trim"

Nowadays, however, circumstances are different, and the British publishers have at last awakened to the folly of their ways. Under the high-sounding title of "The Book Production War Economy Agreement," they have made a communal arrangement to cut out all extravagant book production; books will contain roughly the same amount of reading matter, but they will be considerably thinner.

In an interview reported in The Times, Mr. Harrap, the well-known publisher, said:—

> "In addition to the economy agreement the leading publishing houses of the country are, by a system of self-censorship, raising, rather than lowering, the standard of selection of new books to be published, and in many fields of literature, are cutting down their production of new books to essentials—absolute essentials."

Requisite and Necessary

With all due humility one might suggest that the system of self-censorship could be a shade more exacting; one might enquire what particular fields of literature are being cut down to so drastic an extent; and one might suggest that the "fields" referred to could be considerably broadened with advantage to all concerned.

Mr. Harrap's own slate may be quite clean, but it seems that there are immense quantities of new books published which contain little that is requisite or necessary, either for the body or for the soul.

It is hardly the part of an Irishman, writing in an Irish newspaper, to comment on the number of war books produced in Great Britain.

War Books

Nevertheless, it does seem rather a pity that so large a percentage of the small stock of paper available—and there is only one-third of the pre-war supplies of paper allowed to the publishing trade—should be used to print second-rate books about the war, many of which must, in the nature of things, be ill-informed, and most of which have only a transitory interest; for the time is not yet ripe for a conclusive study of the war, intended for posterity.

Still, I suppose war books sell better than anything else in Great Britain at the present time, and one cannot blame the publishers for "cashing" in on the war in so far as they can.

If the new regulations mean that there will be more books published, nobody will be happier than I. It is to be hoped that one of the minor effects of the regulations will be a decrease in the amount of bad poetry published.

THE POETRY OF WAR

"A GREAT HERITAGE"

By LOCHLINN MacGLYNN

YET another collection of Rupert Brooke's poems has been published. Its appearance raises once again the whole question of war poetry. How indebted we are to the last world war for one thing, at least: the poetry of its idealistic young men who saw, whether rightly or wrongly, a new world beyond the mud of Flanders.

What of our young men of to-day? They work in a technique not fully developed. The volumes of poetry inspired by this war are almost negligible, in the sense that they do not reach men's hearts in the same way as the poetry of Brooke and Wilfrid Owen, and our own Ledwidge.

Brooke, through all the peace years, inspired the young almost to hero worship. His simple lines appealed to the sombre old who had lost their children, and to schoolboys who did not remember war at all. Legends grew around him. There was a room in the old English vicarage, just as he had left it, they told us, and he came back to it on moonlit nights like Glanville's gypsy.

A New Value

Indeed, some of us in the adolescent years gave such reverence to Brooke that the sweetness cloyed, and we almost disliked him. Then the new war came and gave Brooke a new value. We took down the slim, old volumes again, and the publishers brought out new volumes.

He was 24 when his first volume of verses appeared. He had taken part in the defence of Antwerp, and experienced a good deal of the soldier's lot before the next volume appeared—in 1915. It was in this year, on his way to the Dardanelles, that he fell ill. He was buried on the island of Skyros.

Many like to think of the stature Brooke would have reached had he lived. Yet how many would exchange the picture of Brooke as the young lover, full of youth and vitality, for an ageing poet pottering around some English garden, and turning out verses with the life gone from them? The circumstances of his death have played no small part in keeping Brooke evergreen for the young.

There was more of the realist in Wilfrid Owen:

> "Happy are these who love imagination:
> They have enough to carry with ammunition.
> Their spirit drags no pack.
> Their old wounds save with cold can no more ache.
> Having seen all things red,
> Their eyes are rid
> Of the hurt of the colour of blood for ever."

The war had only one week to go when Wilfrid Owen was killed in action in France. He has never reached the heart in the same way as Brooke, yet he, too, was expressive of that scarred generation.

Just 26 when the war came, Julian Henry Grenfell was another of the young poets who lost their lives. There was a great deal of the soldier in Grenfell (he had obtained his commission as far back as 1910, so we are not surprised at the vigour of one of his best poems, "Into Battle":

> "... Life is Colour and Warmth and Light,
> And striving evermore for these;
> And he is dead who will not fight;
> And who dies fighting has increase."

The last war cut short the plans of many of the young men of letters, and the complete works of Isaac Rosenberg, published in 1937, showed just how much this young poet had planned to do. A great deal of the volume is unfinished material. His death gave added value to his poems, and four years after he was killed in action they were first published in book form.

He was killed in the last year of the war, at the age of 28. His realistic poems of the trenches are at once vivid and painful:

> "Only a live thing leaps my hand—
> A queer sardonic rat—
> As I pull the parapet's poppy
> To stick behind my ear.
> Droll rat, they would shoot you if they knew
> Your cosmopolitan sympathies
> (And God knows what antipathies)."

An Irish Soldier

Of an entirely different nature was the poetry of the Irishman, Francis

FATHER SENAN, EDITOR OF "THE CAPUCHIN ANNUAL, 1942."

Ledwidge. For all his roaming in other lands, and his playing with other themes, his whole genius drew its strength from the Irish fields. The Slane he remembered was not particularly his own.

Indeed, I talked with a young Irish soldier in hospital only a few months ago. He was from Slane, too, and the neighbours and the sounds and scents of the little village were always before him in the hospital ward. He saw Slane just as Ledwidge, with remarkable economy, saw it in those memorable lines—except that Ledwidge was the poet, the one poet among his people, and to him was the gift of giving Slane to the world.

At home, we had the war poetry of Pearse and his friends. They, too, faced death with the freshness of youth in their veins, and life in many ways struck them exactly as it struck the war poets of the World War. There is one notable instance: Pearse's short poem on the simple things he remembered the red ladybird on a stalk, the children playing in Iar Connacht.

These things, he says, must pass. So it is with Rupert Brooke in one of his most beautiful pieces, "The Lover." He names all the things he has loved, the coarse male kiss of blankets, water falling, a score of other simple things. And, almost in the same words as Pearse, he refers to the transience of it all. Whatever lies beyond the Great Gateway, these things remain in the world we leave. Nothing of the small, delightful things comes with us.

Certainly the poets who went into battle have left us a great heritage. In the main they remained true to themselves, and there was no idolising of war for its own sake. Nor any hymns of hate, which were left to poets who had never been to war at all. For the real poets of the war it was enough to record the passing emotions, and to hope, for a happier day when youth and gaiety and good fellowship might reign once again.

And just for that reason—their wide humanity and the essential truth of what they wrote—we have not let them grow old.

A book which may well be described as "One of the most entertaining novels of the century."

T. E. Lawrence and Henry Williamson

The Story of an Intimate Friendship

Genius of Friendship: T. E. Lawrence. By Henry Williamson. Faber. 10/6 net.

"GENIUS OF FRIENDSHIP" is a nostalgic book. T. E. Lawrence and Henry Williamson, around whose friendship it is written, do not meet more than twice, and there is nostalgia for a deeper, more intimate friendship. There was nostalgia for peace and simplicity—"to be plumb ordinary"; nostalgia for a new world.

While Lawrence is Private Aircraftsman T. E. Shaw, tinkering about with flying boats, Williamson is writing, solitary and lonely, in pristine Devonshire, breaking away to America now and then, and returning. The author's unhappiness is never stated, but is there all the time, an appalling, chafing, isolation; restlessness, unfulfilment.

Lawrence writes: "Your unhappy letter was very unhappy. I wondered if I could do anything, and knew that I couldn't. In the end we are all self-contained." And of myself, he says: "It has come to this, that I am afraid and hesitant outside. The camp itself is like a defence to me, and I can't leave it. . . . I am like a clock whose spring has run down."

One wonders, does self-contained not mean self-centred? There is the impenetrable isolation of every individual, of which the artist is more continuously and unhappily aware than those of us who forget in the daily round. These two men were more conscious of their isolation than even most artists. But are we ever really self-contained; is it true that 'we can't do anything'? Was the R.A.F. not, confessedly, an escape for Lawrence?

One hesitates to ask these, perhaps banal, questions about genius of friendship, which Williamson is quite sure Lawrence possessed. But towards the end, after years of rather ivory-towerish frustration in a mocking world, how one's blood quickens when Williamson throws down his pen and races off at last to persuade Lawrence to do something about a new world. ". . . for it was time something was done about the pacification of Europe through friendship and fearless common sense. The spirit of resurgent Europe must not be allowed to wither . ."

The end is tragedy. Williamson arrives to find his friend unconscious, after crashing on his motor-cycle while posting a letter to him, dying in a blaze of publicity.

It is a short book, seventy odd pages, of distilled, essential writing, so beautifully printed and bound that it would have been a credit to the house of Faber at any time, but in these days, a triumph. How pleasant it was to cut pages again.

Common Flowers

A Book of Common Flowers. By Rose Bracher. Oxford University Press. 1/- net.

OVER one hundred of the more common wild flowers are described in this little book. The usual methods of classification are omitted, and, instead, the plants are grouped according to their natural localities. Thus we have the woodland plants, the hedgerow plants, those that have their haunts by the seashore, and so forth.

The habits, uses, when any, appearance and descriptions of all the plants are exceedingly well done. Indeed, this little book is a model introduction to a more serious study of botany.

What the letterpress fails to achieve the illustrations make good, and the book in all is admirable.

New Novels

Random Harvest. By James Hilton. Macmillan. 8/6 net.

TWO things are evident in James Hilton's novel as, indeed, they are evident in most of his books; the dream-like quality of his writing and the similarity of his central character with those of his earlier novels. Charles Rainer, for instance, is another "knight without armour" and very closely resembles Conway.

The story is that of a man who lost his memory through shell-shock in the Great War, and in the years following developed two identities. The novelist will not fail to hold the attention of almost any reader, while Charles Rainer becomes "Smithy" and finally, after many changes of fortune, Charles Rainer again, on the eve of another war out of which, one of the characters foretells, will emerge "a different England, that's very certain. Not so rich, and not so snobbish—but maybe we can do without some of the riches and all the snobbery."

It is an excellent book and marks the author's return, perhaps, to an earlier excellence from which of late he has sometimes strayed.

The Empty Room. By Charles Morgan. London: Macmillan. 5/- net.

The name Charles Morgan is sufficient guarantee for the worth of this book. It is a short novel, comparable, in length, and perhaps in quality, as the blurb puts it, with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" or "Lady into Fox."

Highly condensed and containing only 150 pages, its theme is the power of men, and even nations, to be born again at will. The action takes place in an English country house between the beginning of the war and the summer of 1940. Beautifully written, in this gifted author's well-known style, the plot deals with a man's unswerving loyalty to an ideal, his lasting love for his wife, whom he lost several years previously, and for his daughter, who so closely resembles her.

There is much to provoke thought in the book, but one rather irritating thing about it is the lack of chapter heads. The book is divided into two parts; apart from that there are no other divisions, and the endless repetition, while it may get away from conventional and arbitrary divisions, is rather monotonous.

To-morrow's Sunshine. By Lewis Cox. London: Hutchinson. 8/6 net.

This is a romance of war-time Britain. Generally speaking, the theme is love triumphant over all obstacles. In a more particular sense it is the story of a love affair which was rather difficult on account of the fact that the young man in the case, a member of the R.A.F., had a habit of being called up on duty at frequent intervals without warning.

The book opens with Carolyn Lane's wedding, which already had been postponed twice, and as soon as the wedding is over, the honeymoon has to be cancelled on account of the blushing bridegroom's latest call.

However, she joins the W.A.A.F.s, meets him in the East, and everything ends on a correctly optimistic—if not strictly realistic—note.

Pierrot. By Francis Kozik. London: Harrap. 9/6 net.

"Pierrot" tells the story of a child in a troupe of travelling players who tries to win fame, but succeeds only after many years of hard struggles. Gaspard Debures—the child in the story—was born in Bohemia in the year 1796, and all his life had a great love for Napoleon.

He went to Paris at the age of six and through childhood, youth and manhood the struggle to live and act went on until in the end he became the greatest pantomimist of Paris, who was loved by rich and poor alike.

It is a well told story of a man whose understanding of the working-class people of Paris never faltered and whose destiny was blind service to them and their happiness.

STOCK MARKET REPORTS

SPURT IN G.S.R. DEBENTURE

NERVOUS SELLING OF GUINNESS

Markets closed the week in rather quiet fashion on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday, but the tone remained firm. There were one or two features of interest locally. British Industrials made a bright showing, with Textiles again to the fore.

Financial Agreement Loan rose to 106¼, while 4 per cent. Exchequer Bonds were raised to 107. Banks looked buyers in nominal markings.

Guinness units were again lower on nervous liquidation, and, although closing above the worst, they showed a loss of 1/10½ on the day; the Pref. improved to 15½.

The Railway section attracted some attention, and a feature was the strong buying of Great Southern Deb, which resulted in a sharp rise of 3½ points to 61; the Guaranteed declined to 41¼. Great Northern Ord. drooped to 13½.

Carroll Pref. rose to 25/- and Cement Ord. and Clondalkin Paper Ord. held steady.

Textiles were again in request, especially the smaller-priced shares. Bleachers Ord. advanced to 5/9, Bradford Dyers Ord. to 9/10½ and Fine Spinners Ord. to 7/7½. Imperial Tobacco Ord. were 1/6 higher at 133/3, and Vickers Ord. firmed up to 17/3.

WALL STREET

NEW YORK, Friday.—The majority of Wall Street operators were aided by a glimmer of hope that the recent recessions in averages steadied the market for a technical rebound. Many of the leaders, however, failed to attract a following.

The turnover was slightly larger at 650,000 shares, and, of the 704 issues traded, 311 advanced and 220 declined.

The strength of Rails, reflecting the prospects of increases in rates and traffic, imparted a modicum of comfort, but numerous issues still remained under the influence of the tax outlook. Tobaccos steadied in the final trading.

The close was irregular.—(Reuter.)

STORE CATTLE SALES

MESSRS. GANLY AND SONS.

Larger numbers on offer, and again a good demand, particularly for aged forward conditioned bullocks and heifers. Best lots of bullocks, £27 10/- to £22, were from 54/- to 51/- per cwt.; best lots of heifers, £20 to £17, were 52/- to 47/- per cwt.; younger cattle, £12 to £8 10/-. Many other lots of cattle all from £20 to £16 were from 50/- to 45/-.

MESSRS. GAVIN LOW.

Good supplies forward. Fair attendance of home, cross-Channel and North of Ireland feeders and exporters. Aged feeding bullocks and pollies scarce and wanted. Fine show of A.A. cross Roscommon and Sligo bullocks and heifers, and all readily cleared. A special entry of in-calf and bulling heifers, also all sold, the former from £22 to £26 10/- and the latter £14 10/- to £19. Prices per cwt. for best bullocks and heifers 51/- to 55/-. Other classes 46/- to 50/-.

MESSRS. CRAIGIE BROS.

With an increase in numbers of stock and a larger attendance of buyers, quite a brisk trade was experienced at Messrs. Craigie Bros. store sale yesterday. Cattle suitable both for shipping and home feeders were in keen demand, with a dearer tendency in prices, and a complete clearance was easily effected. A number of in-calf heifers and cows were also offered, and all got satisfactorily placed.

COTTON SHARES BOOMING

BROKERS ENCOUNTER BIG DEMAND

The atmosphere generally continued cheerful on the London Stock markets yesterday, with lively interest again directed to Cotton Textile Shares, as the result of the encouraging Lancashire Cotton report and the movement to get operatives back to nucleus cotton mills.

Brokers encountered a big enquiry for both Ordinary and Preference issues, and the rise in values went on apace, market supplies of stock having been considerably depleted during the past few days. English Sewing Cotton, Fine Spinners, Coats and Bradford Dyers' issues all had their supporters, and final prices were higher, without exception.

Another bright section was that for Oil Shares, where Ultramars were outstanding with a jump of 1/3 to 48/9.

The principal investment issues finished the week in subdued fashion, but, despite the fact that little fresh demand was forthcoming, British Funds held up well, and in the case of Local Loans, the price advanced anew to 96⅝. On the other hand, Old War Loan receded slightly to 105⅛.

In the Foreign section, South American Bonds made less appeal, and occasional profit-taking sufficed to create irregularity in Brazilians, the 40-Year Funding reacting to 48.

End-week liquidation also proved the dominating factor in the British Rail market, and in slow trading G.W. Ord. drifted to 44¾, whilst L.M.S. Ord. lost ⅜ to 17⅞.

HOW TEXTILES HAVE RISEN

Bradf'd Dyers	8/1½	10/4½	+2/3
Calico P'ters	6/3	7/10½	+1/7½
Courtaulds ...	34/0	35/9	+1/9
Coats	37/4½	38/9	+1/4½
Eng. Sewing	28/1½	31/0	+2/10½
Fine Cotton ..	5/4½	7/7½	+2/3
Patons and B.	46/3	46/10½	+0/7½
Lancs. Cotton	23/0	25/3	+2/3

Southern Junior issues shared in the decline, and L.N.E. 4 p.c. 1st Pref. closed 1½ at 51. Conversely, Foreign Rails showed new life, no further consideration of the B.A. and Pacifics arrears announcement. Argentine G.W. 5 p.c. Debs. spurted to 52½, B.A. Western 4 p.c. Debs. advanced to 53, and B.A. Pacific issues established gains ranging up to a point.

In addition to the activity in Textiles, Industrials had several other bright features. Woolworth at one time reached 60/6 on more hopeful views concerning the dividend outlook and expectations that the figures due in the next few weeks will make a favourable showing, notwithstanding the various restrictions imposed in the last few months. Building issues also were in good form, with London

Kentucky Expected To Beat Forestation

THE meeting of the unbeaten young hurdlers, Forestation and Kentucky, will arouse most interest at Worcester to-day. These former stable companions meet at level weights in the Four-Year-Old Hurdle, and Forestation, having won over a mile and seven furlongs, appears to have the stronger claims. Kentucky, however, is more speedy, and being a most proficient hurdler probably will prove the better over this easy course. Selections:—

COUNTY DOWN

STAGHOUNDS

We met at Boardmills on Saturday last and enlarged on Mr. Blackshaw's. Hounds settled down slowly, as scent seemed poor, and ran towards Bresagh. Our quarry, running in circles, sometimes in view, was safely taken in a farmyard after an unsatisfactory fifteen minutes.

A second was enlarged behind Killaney Church. Hounds being laid on ran sharp and with good cry for some time parallel with the main Ballynahinch road, towards Girvan's Lane Ends. Turning left just before reaching Gill's Lough, our quarry ran a line of small fields and numerous stone walls, which abound here, on towards Tonaghmore, crossing the Saintfield-Ballynahinch road at Drumconnel. Then turning right-handed he headed for Woodside. Being now in view he turned sharp back, where hounds pushed him fast into Saintfield, where he was safely taken after an enjoyable slow hunt of one hour, parts of which were very good.

DEATH OF COTTAGE

Mr. M. J. Magnier's stallion, Cottage, dropped dead in his box at the Grange Stud, Fermoy, on Tuesday last.

Cottage was bred by Baron E. de Rothschild, and was by Tracery out of Casetta, by Marco, out of Crème Simon, by St. Simon out of Settlement, by Bend Or. After a brief racing career he was sold, in 1924, to Mr. M. J. Magnier, of the Grange Stud, Fermoy, Co. Cork. He headed the list of sires of jumpers in 1938-39, when his progeny won 30 races to the value of £10,502. In 1939, it will be recalled, one of his sons, the Irish-bred, owned, trained and ridden Workman won the Grand National by three lengths from Macmoffat, with Kilstar third. Cottage also was sire of Sorley Boy, winner of the Welsh Grand National; Rathfriland, winner of the Irish Grand National, and Brendan's Cottage, winner of the Cheltenham Gold Cup. Other progeny of his that were good over fences were Dunhill Castle, Cabin Fire, Lough Cot, Tec, winner of the Irish Cesarewitch in 1929.

Evermore Takes Irish Cup to Midlands

(BY MASTER McGRATH.)

LIMERICK, Friday.

THE handicap, as expected, told in the closing stages of the Irish Cup at Clounanna to-day, and for the first time since Mr. Peter Flynn's nomination, Figaro, won the stake in 1929, the trophy went to the Midlands, Evermore beating Jim Mac in the deciding course.

The winner, owned by Mr. McDermott, of Castlepollard, Westmeath, and nominated by Mr. Joseph Clyne, of Delvin, as the result of his four comparatively light courses, was joint favourite with Jim Mac, Cork Cup runner-up, when we resumed. The handicap was balanced a bit when, slipped with Gadabout, Evermore was brought the whole way, but his display was in every respect most convincing.

Then Jim Mac completely reversed the Ballincollig form when he whacked the original favourite, Ballymacquin Monarch, in the succeeding course. "The Monarch" had had a rather severe course to wind up with last evening, and when I saw him at the kennels this morning he was rather listless, and while his front pads were obviously very tender, still he battled it out gamely. From a good slip he showed well clear, but for some reason changed sides. Jim Mac wore him down, squeezed up for the all important first score, the hare being pressed over to him. Jim Mac also had the second point, and that about finished it; for, though the brindle contested it stoutly, he never looked like making up the leeway behind a stag of a hare.

The decider was a thriller. Jim Mac came away like a streak of lightning, but Evermore overhauled him, and getting the turn by four good lengths, held on for a coupe more. Two points only represented Jim Mac's supreme effort before Evermore brought off a brilliant kill. It was a magnificent performance by the winner, who before coming to Clounanna won a two-course all-aged stake at Oldcastle, and the McKeown Cup at Longford. Details:—

IRISH CUP—For 64 all ages. Winner, £350 and cup; runner-up, £100; two dogs, £40 each; four dogs, £20 each; eight dogs, £10 each.

Boxing

Ingle Too Good For O'Reilly

IT was a pity that Jimmy Ingle did not have stronger opposition on his return to the ring after an absence of some months. The Munster champion, Corpl. P. O'Reilly, was quite plucky, but he was always nervous, and he was not in Ingle's class. The latter was not timing his punches correctly—which was not altogether surprising—but he hit very hard, and the referee stopped it in the fourth round. Ingle is developing.

There was an entirely unexpected ending to the Black-Gallagher welter-weight bout—in fact, it hardly had a beginning. Right from the bell, Black caught his opponent with a right and left to the face, shaking him to the heels, and a moment later he repeated the process, Gallagher going down for four. When he got up he was obviously out on his feet, so the referee stopped it after thirty seconds of actual fighting. In their great bout at the Coach recently, Gallagher was considered unlucky to have lost on points

The Ulster middle-weight champion, J. W. Blackborrow, scored another win down here when he outpointed Sergt. W. Moore. It was a bout in which the Ulsterman took all the credit. On two occasions Moore went on fighting after the bell, inflicting a good deal of punishment the first time, and in the closing rounds he held persistently. Blackborrow was mainly the attacker after the first round, but he was not timing his punches properly until the last round, when he nearly had Moore knocked out.

W. Ryan and P. Glennon had a lively scrap, in which Glennon put in a grand finish, but just failed to make up his arrears. He was down for a count of eight just at the end of the third round. Ryan's work at close quarters was always effective, but Glennon gave him a lesson in long range boxing in the last round. He has the rather bad habit of propping up his opponent with his left hand before hitting with the right.

Another Irish champion to reappear at the Stadium after an absence was Sergeant M. Dwan, but he was not at all impressive against P. Murtagh, of the Star Club, Belfast. He was much the faster of the two, and hit very hard at times, but he had periods of complete inactivity in a scrambling bout. The result in Dwan's favour was never in doubt, but he has done much better than this.

Feather-weight—B. Coughlan (Arbour Hill) beat Private W. Casey (Islandbridge), retired third round; W. Ryan (Avona) beat P. Glennon (Tramway) on points.

Welter-weight—Corporal V. Black (Baldonnel) beat Private P. Gallagher (Islandbridge), stopped in first round; F. Rosenfeld (Jewish) beat F. Somers (Tramway) on points; J. Ingle (St. Andrew's) beat Corporal P. O'Reilly (Collins, Cork), stopped in fourth round.

Middle-weight — J. W. Blackborrow (Crown, Belfast) beat Sergeant W. Moore (Collins) on points.

Cruiser-weight—Sergt. M. Dwan (Islandbridge) beat J. Murtagh (Star, Belfast) on points.

Juvenile—J. Collins (Avona) beat J. O'Neill (Phœnix); M. Fagan (C.B.S.) beat A. Plummer (Avona).

Malone's Visit to Castle Avenue

SOME of the Dublin clubs will be below full strength for their matches this afternoon. Clontarf, whose attractive fixture with Malone at Castle avenue starts at 3.30, will again be without their outhalf, N. C. Mahony, for whom V. Crawford deputises. This should be an excellent game, for Malone have much the best club record in the North. Lansdowne will not have the services of C. Murphy, the two Cosgraves, or J. Cagney for their game against Instonians in Belfast, while C. Fox, the Wanderers' scrum-half, is on the injured list, and cannot turn out against Palmerston. Bective are the most heavily hit of all, as three of their backs, K. Doyle, Jack Doyle, and M. Forde, are suffering from pulled muscles.
